P. SUMMARY OF CONTRIBUTION TO KNOWLEDGE

My research is on the nexus between citizens' participation, grassroots engagement, and digital governance within the vast political science discipline. I have shown how local institutions can connect with the public and how digital technological tools—the Internet, Robotics and Artificial Intelligent, social media and mobile phones - can be used to objectify this. And the manner in which such digital deployment can enhance open, inclusive governance systems and sustainable development within the comparative contexts of sub-Saharan Africa. My research activities centered around but were not limited to political behaviour, local governance, politics and development studies, ICT and media studies, national government and politics, comparative politics, and peace and conflict studies. I have also contributed to knowledge by attending and presenting academic papers in several refereed local and international conferences. I am equally engaged in teaching and mentoring students as a Level Adviser and in several administrative roles as the Departmental Examination Officer (DEO) and the College Liaison Officer for CoE Ipetu-Ijesa Campus and presently the Acting Head, Department of Local Government and Development Studies, Faculty of Social Sciences Okuku campus.
