P. SUMMARY OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO KNOWLEDGE

My research concentration in the past few years has been in the broad area of applied English linguistics. I have been able to complement the outputs of other applied linguists in the use of corpus and corpus analytical tools to investigate patterns of language use with focus on such sociodemographic variables as age, gender, educational background, socioeconomic background and regional varieties. Our use of corpus linguistics approach to language analysis has also been helpful in tracing the history of herdsmen related crimes and criminalities in Nigeria. In the area of forensic linguistics, my research in criminal investigation and justice administration has shown in the specific case of student investigation and disciplinary interrogations that though the questions and questioning strategies may be structurally coercive, such questions are functionally non-coercive, and serves no inhibitory purpose in the process.
